POPE STUNS CATHOLIC CHURCH WITH ANNOUNCEMENT HE'S LEAVING

Pope Benedict XVI waves to the faithful gathered in Rome on Good Friday 2012. The pope announced Monday he will resign his position, effective Feb. 28. GETTYIMAGES FILE

Reuters

VATICAN CITY Pope Benedict stunned the Roman Catholic Church on Monday when he announced he would stand down, the first pope to do so in centuries, saying he no longer had the mental and physical strength to go on.

Church officials tried to relay a climate of calm confidence in the running of a 2,000-year-old institution, but the decision could lead to uncertainty in a Church already besieged by scandal for covering up sexual abuse of children by priests.

The soft-spoken German, who always maintained that he never wanted to be pope, was an uncompromising conservative on social and theological issues, fighting what he regarded as the increasing secularization of society. It remains to be seen whether his successor will continue such battles or do more to bend with the times.

Despite his firm opposition to tolerance of homosexual acts, his eight-year reign saw gay marriage accepted in many countries.

He staunchly resisted allowing women to be ordained as priests, and opposed embryonic stem cell research, although he retreated slightly from the position that condoms could never be used to fight AIDS.

He repeatedly apologized for the Church's failure to root out child abuse by priests, but critics said he did too little and the efforts failed to stop a rapid decline in Church attendance in the West, especially in his native Europe.

In addition to child sexual abuse crises, his papacy saw the Church rocked by Muslim anger after he compared Islam to violence. Jews were upset over rehabilitation of a Holocaust denier. During a scandal over the Church's business dealings, his butler was accused of leaking his private papers.

In an announcement read to cardinals in Latin, the 85-year-old said: "Well aware of the seriousness of this act, with full freedom I declare that I renounce the ministry of Bishop of Rome, Successor of St Peter."

Next pope might not be from Europe

Reuters

PARIS With Pope Benedict's announcement that he will resign Feb. 28, the time may be coming for the Roman Catholic Church to elect its first non-European leader—and it could be a Latin American.

The region already represents 42 percent of the world's 1.2 billion-strong Catholic population, the largest single block in the Church, compared to 25 percent in its European heartland.

After John Paul, who was of Polish descent, and German-born Benedict, the post once reserved for Italians is wide open. The cardinals will elect the man whom they think will best guide the church.

Two senior Vatican officials recently dropped surprisingly clear hints about possible successors. The upshot of their remarks is that the next pope could well be from Latin America.

"I know a lot of bishops and cardinals from Latin America who could take responsibility for the universal Church," said Archbishop Gerhard Mueller, who now holds the pope's old post as head of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith.

"The universal Church teaches that Christianity isn't centered on Europe," the German-born archbishop told Duesseldorf's Rheinische Post newspaper just before Christmas.

What happens to the pope's Twitter handle?

Pope Benedict joined Twitter last year and amassed more than 1.5 million followers. As of Monday night, @Pontifex had not tweeted about his announcement to resign. No word on what will happen to the account once he leaves.

'A little bit of pain' coming for the CTA

GOING PUBLIC

Brown and Purple line riders, your commute will get a little loopy starting next month.

Part of Brown and Purple line service will shutter for nine-day periods in March and late April as the city overhauls the Wells Street Bridge. At the same time, the CTA is rebuilding the Loop junction at Lake and Wells streets and fixing track along Hubbard Street that suffers from slow zones.

Chicago Department of Transportation commissioner Gabe Klein said Monday that CTA riders will endure a "little bit of pain." The shutdowns are set to occur March 1-10 and April 26-May 5.

During that time:

» There will be no Purple Line Express service to the Loop during rush hour. Purple Line service will end at the Howard stop, where riders can take the Red Line to get downtown.

» During rush hour, two out of three southbound Brown Line trains will travel through the Red Line subway and end at the Roosevelt stop.

» One out of three southbound Brown Line trains in rush hour will end service at the Merchandise Mart stop. Shuttle buses will pick up riders at the Chicago Brown Line stop and take them to the Clark/Lake and Washington/Wells stations.

» Brown Line trains will run every 10 to 12 minutes to the Merchandise Mart only from 10 a.m.-2 p.m. and 7 p.m.-10 p.m. After 10 p.m., southbound Brown Line stations will run only to the Chicago Brown Line stop.

» Red Line trains likely will see extra ridership from the Brown Line during rush hour. Additional Red Line service will be added during off-peak hours.

» A free shuttle bus will circulate around the Loop from about 4:30 a.m. to 1:30 a.m.

» Extra service will be added to the No. 37 Sedgwick and No. 22 Clark buses during morning and evening rush. The No. 146 Inner Drive/Michigan Express and No. 147 Outer Drive Express buses will see extra service during evening rush.

STATIONARY A weekly dispatch from a CTA station of note

This week: Southport Brown Line

Two years ago, the Lakeview Chamber of Commerce proposed a pedestrian-friendly walkway under the "L" tracks between the Southport and Paulina stations. Nicknamed the "Lowline," the space would feature plants and solar-power light displays instead of just parking spaces for cars. The Lakeview chamber said it is working with the CTA to figure out how it can use the area under the tracks and hopes to have the Lowline in place in the next five years. In the meantime, the Low Line Market, a weekly outdoor produce and artisan market, will kick off this summer on Southport, which would be the east entrance to the Lowline. The market would get Chicagoans accustomed to an urban, pedestrian experience in the area, the chamber said.

Dude, where's my tweet?

Twitter plans to make it easier for users to find their older tweets, beyond those searchable in the one-week window it currently features.

The site has begun to roll out an update that will make it possible to find tweets more than a week old through keywords and hashtags. Users will not be able to search for every tweet, just ones that were measurably popular or interactive. So if you want to show off those dozen retweets last Wednesday's breakfast joke got you, that tweet might become easier to find.

Twitter engineer Paul Burstein posted to the company's blog: "We look at a variety of types of engagement, like favorites, retweets, and clicks, to determine which tweets to show. We'll be steadily increasing this percentage over time, and ultimately, aim to surface the best content for your query."

The update comes following an option launched in December that allowed users to download an archive of their entire collection of tweets. That was a strictly personal option, however, and while the specific reason for the update is unclear, Business Insider has published past findings indicating that promoted or advertised tweets are more effective when they appear in search results rather than in a user's feed itself.

MEN ACCUSED IN HADIYA PENDLETON'S SLAYING BELIEVED THEY WERE ATTACKING A RIVAL GANG, POLICE SAY

Chicago Tribune

Two reputed gang members were out for revenge from a previous shooting when they opened fire on a group of students in a South Side park last month, killing 15-year-old Hadiya Pendleton in a heartbreaking case that has brought national attention to Chicago's rampant gun violence, police said.

Michael Ward, 18, and Kenneth Williams, 20, each were charged with first-degree murder, attempted murder and aggravated battery with a firearm in the Jan. 29 attack that also left two other teens wounded.

Ward confessed to police that he and Williams mistook a Pendleton companion for rivals who had shot and wounded Williams in July, police Superintendent Garry McCarthy said at a news conference Monday night at the Area Central police headquarters.

Ward told police that he and Williams got out of their car, crept up on the group and opened fire in Harsh Park, according to McCarthy. Williams then drove them from the scene, he said.

"The offenders had it all wrong. They thought the group they shot into included members of a rival gang. Instead, it was a group of upstanding, determined kids who, like Hadiya, were repulsed by the gang lifestyle," said McCarthy, flanked by two dozen detectives and gang investigators who worked the case.

Detectives arrested the two Saturday night as they were on their way to a suburban strip club to celebrate a friend's birthday, McCarthy said. Pendleton had been buried only hours earlier in a funeral attended by first lady Michelle Obama.

"I don't even know what to say about that," McCarthy said. "They were going out to celebrate at a strip club."

Williams did not confess, and police have not recovered a murder weapon, McCarthy said. Both are due in bond court Tuesday.

Williams

Hadiya's father, Nathaniel Pendleton, said Monday night that news of the charges marked the first time since his daughter's slaying that he had a "legitimate" smile on his face.

"I'm ecstatic that they found the two guys," he told the Tribune during a brief telephone interview from Washington, D.C., where he and wife Cleopatra Cowley-Pendleton will attend the State of the Union address Tuesday night as guests of President Obama. "[I'm] thanking God that these two guys are off the streets, so that this doesn't happen to another innocent person."

Danetria Hutson, 15, a classmate who held Hadiya in her arms after she was shot, said she and others who witnessed the shooting have had nightmares.

"A lot of us were actually paranoid because the guys were still out there," Hutson said in a telephone interview. "They knew where we went to school."

McCarthy said that two days before the murder, police had stopped Ward in his Nissan Sentra as part of a routine gang investigation. That information wound up being the starting point for detectives when witnesses in the shooting described seeing a similar car driving away from the scene, he said.

Through surveillance and interviews—including several fruitful interviews with parolees in the neighborhood—detectives were able to hone in on Ward and Williams, McCarthy said. On Saturday night, the decision was made to stop the two if they were spotted. Police watched as they departed in a caravan of cars headed to the strip club in Harvey. They were pulled over near 67th Street and South King Drive and taken in for questioning.

McCarthy said Williams was shot July 11 at 39th Street and South Lake Park Avenue, and an arrest was made. But that gunman was let go after Williams refused to cooperate, McCarthy said.

McCarthy also noted that at the time of the slaying Ward was on probation for a weapons conviction. McCarthy said weak Illinois gun laws allowed Ward to avoid jail time because of the absence of "mandatory minimum" sentences.

"This incident did not have to occur," McCarthy said. "And if mandatory minimums existed in the state of Illinois, Michael Ward would not have been on the street to commit this heinous act."

In announcing the charges, McCarthy praised the "meticulous" detective work that led to the arrests, but also expressed frustration that, despite a $40,000 reward for information in the shooting, no one who had knowledge of the crime came forward.

"While we received a lot of tips in this particular case and the community really stepped up and tried to help us, I'm sad to point out that we did not get our target audience to step up," McCarthy said.

Hadiya was fatally shot about a mile north of the president's Kenwood home a little more than a week after the King College Prep honor student performed with the band near Washington during inauguration festivities.

Hadiya's death occurred during the deadliest January in Chicago since 2002. It also came on the heels of a homicide total last year that was the highest since 2008 and the second highest since 2003.

The first lady's attendance at Hadiya's funeral placed Chicago even further into the spotlight of a national debate over gun violence that has polarized Congress and led the president to take his gun-control initiatives on the road to garner more public support. The president is scheduled to appear in Chicago on Friday to address violence.

In the days following Hadiya's death, clergy and community leaders raised the $40,000 in reward money for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the teen's killer or killers.

The victim's father acknowledged that true closure will come if Ward and Williams are convicted of the crimes. But the charges, he said, are a good start.

"Right now, I can say to you that the healing can start," Nathaniel Pendleton said.

Relatives of homicide victims will attend president's speech

Chicago Tribune

The shooting death of Hadiya Pendleton has propelled Chicago to a central position in the national gun debate and prompted President Obama to turn to his hometown for help in selling his anti-violence initiatives to the public.

With the spotlight firmly on Chicago, where violence claimed more than 500 lives last year, the president has enlisted grieving relatives to put a face on the pain and suffering that lingers after a murder.

At Tuesday night's State of the Union address, Hadiya's parents, Cleopatra Cowley-Pendleton and Nathaniel Pendleton, will be seated with first lady Michelle Obama, who attended the 15-year-old's funeral last weekend.

Also Tuesday, relatives of other Chicago homicide victims will visit Washington to lobby lawmakers for tougher gun measures. A Senate hearing will take testimony from Sandra Wortham, sister of police officer Thomas Wortham, who survived military service in Iraq only to be shot to death in Chatham in 2010.

And Friday, Obama will return to his hometown to talk about the economy and gun violence.

While the president is attempting to get Congress to pass federal legislation that would ban assault weapons, limit high-powered magazines and strengthen background checks for gun owners, Chicago and Illinois are trying to tackle their own gun concerns.

Mayor Emanuel said Monday that he wel-

"I don't think there's anybody better than the president of the United States to also have a conversation of how we get our young men who have in the past been the victims and also the perpetrators ... into a real conversation of mentors, moral anchoring, a better sense of who they are and their potential," the mayor said.

"Given that the lion's share of both the perpetrators and the victims are young African-American men, who better to have that discussion than the president of the United States, who has repeatedly talked about fathering and the role of fathering?" Emanuel asked.

Richard Pearson, executive director of the Illinois State Rifle Association, acknowledged that he is concerned about the momentum being built in Illinois over the gun issue. But, he said, it is misdirected.

"This argument should be about gang shootings and has nothing to do with law-abiding citizens. But the legislation is all about law-abiding citizens and has nothing to do with gangs. We have to redirect this conversation toward the drug-trafficking gangs in the city of Chicago."

Mayor: Sandi Jackson's replacement gives ward 'a clean break'

Chicago Tribune

Saying he was breaking with the "history here in the 7th Ward," Mayor Emanuel on Monday appointed a former Illinois Department of Transportation special projects manager to replace Sandi Jackson as alderman.

Introducing Natasha Holmes to represent the Southeast Side ward in the City Council, Emanuel nodded to the legal problems faced by the traditional political powers that have dominated the area for years.

Emanuel noted that when Jackson stepped down last month amid controversy surrounding her husband, former U.S. Rep. Jesse Jackson Jr., news reports said the "pickings were going to be slim" to replace her. In addition to the Jacksons' problems, former 7th Ward alderman and current Cook County Commissioner William Beavers is under federal indictment for allegedly failing to pay income taxes on campaign funds he used for personal expenses.

"Usually somebody works up the ranks politically. I can say that as a former staff person," said Emanuel, who worked for the Clinton White House before getting elected to Congress. "So here we have a situation in the 7th Ward, given the history—and we should be cognizant and open about it—that we have somebody that doesn't come out of that. And I think that's a good thing. It's a clean break."

Holmes offered few specifics about her plans for the ward, saying at an introductory news conference at the South Shore Public Library that she wants to meet with community groups "to understand the more intimate details of the issues."

Holmes left the state transportation agency last year and recently worked as a project manager for Metro Strategies Inc. In late 2011, she received her law degree from Kent College of Law and plans to sit for the bar exam this month, according to her aldermanic application.

Metro Strategies is a Glen Ellyn-based planning, policy and public affairs firm that works with government, businesses and nonprofit organizations. It handled public outreach for the Chicago Department of Transportation's Streets for Cycling Plan 2020, according to the company's website.

Before working for IDOT, Holmes, 37, was the senior transportation associate for the Metropolitan Planning Council. She started her career as a transportation planning liaison for the DuPage Mayors and Managers Conference.

In all, the city received 65 applications for the post held by Jackson, who stepped down as her husband struggled with mental illness and a federal investigation that led to his resignation last year. Emanuel picked Holmes after interviewing four finalists.

Latin Kings leader gets 40 years

Chicago Tribune

A man who authorities said was second in command of one of the country's largest street gangs has been sentenced to 40 years in prison for organizing a violent criminal enterprise that plagued neighborhoods in Chicago and beyond, prosecutors said.

Vicente Garcia Jr., 35, was convicted in 2011 of racketeering conspiracy and other charges related to drug trafficking and murder after federal prosecutors alleged he oversaw the activities of some 10,000 Latin Kings members in Illinois, the U.S. Attorney's Office said in a news release.

On Friday, U.S. District Judge Charles Norgle ordered that Garcia spend five years in supervised release after he finishes his prison term. He will have to spend at least 85 percent of his 40-year sentence in custody, according to federal prosecutors.

Garcia's sentence comes a month after Augustin "Tino" Zambrano, considered the highest-ranking Latin King in the country, was sentenced to 60 years in prison.

MOUNTAIN DEW AND CEREAL?

How would you like to start your mornings with an ice-cold Mountain Dew? Yow.

That's exactly what PepsiCo, owner of the brand, wants you to do. The company announced Monday the debut of Mountain Dew Kickstart, a caffeinated juice drink it hopes will be a viable morning alternative to coffee or tea.

Mountain Dew spokesperson Elisa Baker said the company did extensive research into the matter.

"Our consumers told us they were looking for an alternative to traditional morning beverages," she said.

Kickstart will contain 5 percent fruit juice, Baker said. It will contain 92 milligrams of caffeine in a 16-ounce can. A regular can of Mountain Dew has 72 milligrams.

Kickstart, which will come in two flavors—fruit punch and orange citrus—will hit store shelves Feb 25.

Miss. begins cleanup

1 Emergency officials in seven Mississippi counties were dealing with widespread damage Monday after a swarm of storms swept through the area Sunday evening, injuring dozens of people. No deaths were reported.

Two people in Lamar County were critically hurt, the Mississippi Emergency Management Agency said.

A tornado struck Hattiesburg, a southern Mississippi city that straddles Lamar and Forrest counties.

Hattiesburg Mayor Johnny DuPree reported major damage to some structures. "If there is a good thing about this, [it's that the storms] happened on a Sunday when most of these structures were vacant," he said.

Tornado sirens were activated 20 to 30 minutes before the twister touched down, DuPree said.

"I think that was enough for people to find shelter, to go to a place in their house that was safe," he said.

Several homes were destroyed in Marion County, and numerous structures—including businesses and public buildings—sustained "significant damage," the state emergency management agency said.

As of Monday morning, 4,000 power customers were without electricity, down from the approximately 14,000 who had lost power, Mississippi Power spokesman Mark Davis said.

Mississippi Gov. Phil Bryant declared a state of emergency for the affected counties. The

UNIVERSITY HIT

The University of Southern Mississippi suffered damage to several buildings, but there were no reports of injuries there. The campus already was closed for Mardi Gras and was to remain closed through Tuesday; classes were canceled through Wednesday.

declaration means state resources and assets can be used to support local response efforts. Some 63 people were treated at area hospitals, most of them for minor injuries, he said.

Some 200 mobile homes were damaged or destroyed, and 100 apartments were damaged and uninhabitable, he said.

2 3 dead in court shooting

A man shot and killed two women waiting to pass through metal detectors at a courthouse in Wilmington, Del., on Monday and was then killed himself after an exchange of gunfire with police, officials said. Two police officers also were struck by bullets but were saved by their bulletproof vests.

3 No death penalty in Indiana case

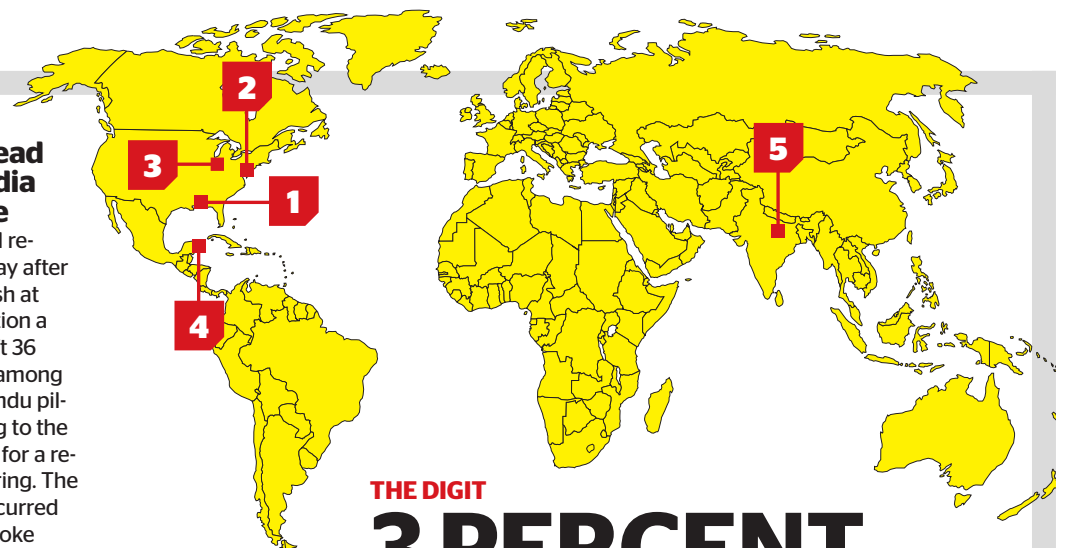

Indianapolis prosecutors say they won't seek the death penalty against a woman, her boyfriend and his brother in a house explosion last year that killed a couple and leveled a neighborhood. Marion County prosecutors are seeking life sentences without parole.

4 Cruise ship adrift

A Carnival cruise ship in the Gulf of Mexico with more than 4,200 passengers and crew will be towed to port after a weekend engine fire left it dead in the water, a cruise line official said. The U.S. Coast Guard cutter Vigorous arrived early Monday to aid the stranded ship.

5 36 dead in India stampede

A local official resigned Monday after a chaotic crush at a railroad station a day earlier left 36 people dead among millions of Hindu pilgrims flocking to the Ganges River for a religious gathering. The stampede occurred as pilgrims broke through temporary barriers and crowded onto already busy platforms, railway authorities said.

Duncan Keith (center) and the Hawks have yet to lose in regulation. GETTY IMAGES

No ducking this Hawks math

Alex Quigley

» @alexquigley

Ladies and germs, the Blackhawks are the mayors of Cray-craytown, population Us. They're only four games away from tying the all-time record of 16 games without a regulation loss to start a season. They'll eventually lose a game, but will it happen before the record falls? LET US MATH.

Tuesday vs. Anaheim

The Ducks are in the middle of a long road trip, and the Hawks will be home for the first time in weeks. Anaheim is an impressive 8-2-1 so far. A great Ducks offense could score early and silence the UC, and if there's a game on the homestand to have the nervous yips, this is the one.

Odds of losing: 45 percent

Friday vs. San Jose

After watching what Chicago did to the Sharks last week in a 5-3 win, I don't see the streak ending at home.

Odds of losing: 25 percent

Sunday vs. Los Angeles

A national TV audience against the defending champs? We saw this movie before. It ended with Patrick Kane yelling "Yippee ki yay" and the Nakatomi Building exploding. (I may have flipped to "Die Hard" after the Hawks' opening day 5-2 domination of the Kings.)

Odds of losing: 25 percent

Feb. 19 vs. Vancouver

Man, I hate these guys. And again they're leading their division. But goalie Roberto Luongo tends to lose his mind at the UC.

Odds of losing: 35 percent

Odds of Luongo getting pulled midgame: 20 percent

Feb. 22 vs. San Jose

Yep, the Sharks circle back as part of the same long road trip. Sucks for them. Awesome for us!

Odds of losing: 15 percent

TUESDAY'S GAME

Blackhawks vs. Anaheim

7:30 p.m. CSN

Feb. 24 vs. Columbus

The good news for the Blue Jackets is they're better this year! The bad news is, this game is their last on a six-game, two-week trek. Worse news: The Blackhawks are really good.

Odds of losing: 10 percent

Feb. 25 vs. Edmonton

Edmonton is near the bottom of the league in 5-on-5 goal ratio. For the casual fan: They're really bad at stopping the other team from scoring goals and also bad at scoring goals themselves.

Odds of losing: 15 percent

Odds of going undefeated in regulation all season: 0.05 percent

Odds of breaking the record: 25 percent.

Tuesday vs. Anaheim is their toughest test.

Odds of making the playoffs: 100 percent.

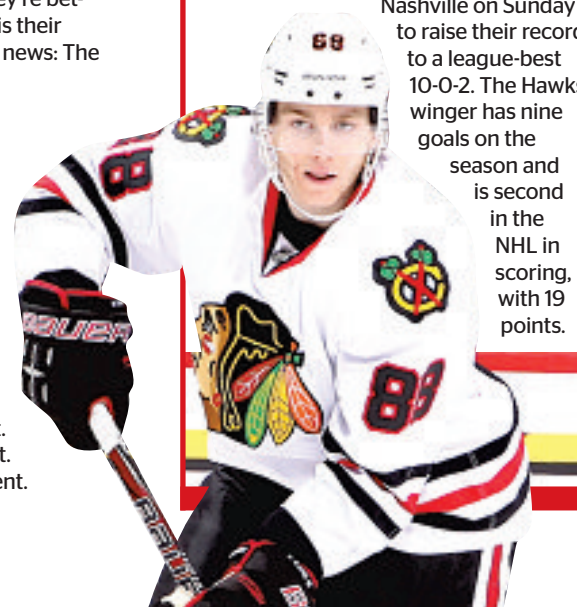

Book it. Done.

ALEX QUIGLEY IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

NO. 88 IS NO. 1

Patrick Kane earned NHL "First Star" honors for the week ending Sunday after helping the Blackhawks win the final three games of their six-game road trip. Kane had an NHL-high five goals plus an assist for the Hawks, who beat Nashville on Sunday to raise their record to a league-best 10-0-2. The Hawks winger has nine goals on the season and is second in the NHL in scoring, with 19 points.

1 Why is Patrick Kane playing so well right now?	Deer antler spray. In his pants.	He's amped up for Presidents Day.	He always gets really focused before spring break.	Radiant power of Patrick Sharp's eyes transmitting beauty and talent onto Kane's stick.	He's using deer antler velvet-infused shampoo.
2 What will we learn about the Cubs during spring training?	Probably too much about their bunting tournament.	Scott Hairston's favorite yogurt.	They are the team we thought we would see.	Dale Sveum's last name still will be botched by the local media.	They secretly hate Eddie Vedder for that Cubs anthem.
3 What will we learn about the Sox during spring training?	Probably not enough about why Hawk and Stoney sit 14 feet apart.	Scott Hairston's least favorite yogurt.	They are not the team we ever want to see.	The team is building a new "scratch-off and Pall Mall" section at facility that will cater to their fan base.	Danks forced the team to do a really embarrassing Harlem Shakes video.
4 If Aaron Rodgers plays eight more years with Green Bay the Bears won't see a Super Bowl for eight years.	... it'll be a problem for the next three coaches of the Bears.	... that should be just enough time to find the new head coach.	... the Bears got 16 more games wondering why they can't get somebody like Aaron Rodgers.	... then he has plenty of time to retire and come back 13 times.
5 Illinois has two straight wins over ranked teams. What's their secret?	I'm still stuck on Rodgers in Green Bay for eight more years.	They hate the first 25 numbers.	They somehow keep playing schools in cities with less to do than Champaign.	Brandon Paul is mysteriously looking like Teen Wolf late in the second half.	They're borrowing Kane's shampoo.

If the White Sox ever want to lay a guilt trip on Adam Dunn and John Danks, this is the place to start.

Dunn ranked 12th and Danks 11th among the players whose contracts "would attract little to no interest if they were made available for trade tomorrow," according to Jonah Keri of grantland.com.

Dunn is in the third year of a four-year, $56 million contract. Danks, coming off shoulder surgery, starts the second year of a five-year, $65 million contract.

Cubs closer Carlos Marmol (one year, $9.8 million left on a three-year, $20 million contract), and outfielder Alfonso Soriano (two years, $36 million remaining on a eight-year, $136 million deal) received "honorable mention." Here are the top five:

Sorry, Bey—no Grammy lip-sync allowed

Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES Strutting the stage in her white tuxedo jacket, shorts and sparkling top hat, Taylor Swift opened Sunday's Grammy Awards with a live performance of her current hit, "We Are Never Ever Getting Back Together."

Inside the auditorium, the singer's performance earned loud applause. But to the Twitterverse watching at home, the pop and country superstar sang a little bit flat.

Swift was dancing in the footsteps of countless artists who have performed live on music's biggest night. Unlike Beyonce at President Obama's inauguration last month, Swift had no choice: She had to sing live and take her chances.

That's because the Grammys have a zero-tolerance policy for lip-syncing, requiring all performances be live.

"Since Milli Vanilli, the mandate has been made absolutely unequivocally," said Michael Abbott, the audio director who has helped coordinate the show's live performances for more than 20 years. "The Grammys only have live performances, no questions about it."

Grammy officials say the no lip-syncing edict came after pop and dance group Milli Vanilli was stripped of its 1990 best new artist award when the duo admitted that they did not use their actual voices on their album or in performances.

Abbott acknowledges that the insistence that all of its live acts are 100 percent live hasn't quieted skepticism.

After Chris Brown's acrobatic dance performance at last year's Grammys, many wondered how he could possibly pull off those moves while singing on key.

Though the Grammys allow performers to use some special sound effects and track augmentation during their performances, Abbott insists viewers are hearing their actual voices and instruments.

As performances continue to become more elaborate, artists face new challenges to ensure the quality of their sounds, said Ilana Martin, a voice coach who has worked with artists such as P. Diddy and Alicia Keys.

Martin said the ideal physical setup for a vocal performance is standing at a microphone, like Carrie Underwood did while performing her songs "Blown Away" and "Two Black Cadillac" at Sunday night's show.

Artists known for their moves, such as

Taylor Swift performs Sunday at the Grammys. REUTERS

Usher and Pink, are known to practice singing while running or jumping on trampolines to master singing while their bodies are bouncing, Martin said.

During his performance with rapper Wiz Khalifa at Sunday's Grammys, R&B singer

Miguel sang while dashing down the aisle of the audience—and his crooning on "Adorn" didn't falter.

"If you've got the fire in your belly, and sing with your whole spirit," Martin said, "you're going to rock the performance."

TRACK REVIEW

'A Tattered Line of String' The Postal Service

By Dana Moran

REDEYE SOUND BOARD
OK, let's be honest:
While Postal Service fans have really, insanely high expectations
from the band after 10 years of silence, we're also just pumped to be getting new material. And since the musical universe is now firmly ensconced in a new era of electronic music, Ben Gibbard (left) and Jimmy Tamborello's timing really couldn't be more perfect.

Luckily for all of us, "A Tattered Line of String" is a bubbly, poppy delight.
Gibbard's voice carries a citrusy freshness that was more downplayed
amid the serious, weighty romance of the original
"Give Up" release. As on plenty of other Postal Service and Death Cab tracks, I'm always surprised by the lightness he can bring to an otherwise potentially soul-crushing situation. In this case, it's a guy who can't get things together with the object of his affection—or with seemingly anything else in his life. But there's always hope. Former Rilo Kiley frontwoman Jenny Lewis, who did backing vocals on much of "Give Up," also is back for the family reunion, and once again, she's a welcome guest.

On to the electronica portion of this conversation! Amid the more guttural, flashy beats backing a lot of recent dubstep, "Tattered Line's" optimistic tones are a relief.
There's even a section at the beginning that sounds like Mario jumping on Goombas, which I assume Gibbard and Tamborello have a lot of experience with.

The bottom line: If these guys don't show up for Lolla, we're prepared to do some serious
Bon Iver-level moping.

The two most-famous Justins in the music-sphere also were busy Sunday night. Justin Timberlake let loose "Mirrors," an 8-minute track from "The 20/20 Experience." Justin Bieber TRIED to have a livestream chat with fans during the Grammys (for which he was not nominated), but had all manner of tweet-worthy technical difficulties. Poor lil' guy.

CREW LOVE

Drake's 'Started From the Bottom' video is one giant party

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

Drake was feeling the Grammys love at Sunday's ceremony—his "Take Care" picked up best rap album, and he looked mighty dapper rocking a tux and a smile. And he picked a pretty great way to celebrate: unleashing the video for "Started From the Bottom," the first single from upcoming release "Nothing Was the Same." The video chronicles exactly what you'd think—Drake's rise from the bottom to the bling-encrusted top—but with the special touch of Director X, who also helmed Drake's "HYFR" bar mitzvah-themed vid. We joined the party with a scene-by-scene look.

:03 Kids are running across a Toronto soccer field. Hey, Drake's from Toronto ... this must be the bottom!

:15 But don't worry, we get a look at the top quickly when an entirely white-clad Drake roams the streets in a white convertible Bentley in the snow. It's COLD up here.

:24 Next step up from the bottom: Working nights at the drugstore. Move that mouthwash! Man, his co-workers are lazy ... this could be a great life lesson.

1:09 Comic sketch interlude time! Another lesson: You'll also stay at the bottom if you pretend to be a rapper, use a comb to pick out your gross beard and say lewd things to large-breasted drug-store customers.

:40 Promoted to night manager! Sweet! This is what happens when you don't sit around reading magazines during your shift.

:36 "Livin' at my mama's house, we argue every Monday." What's up, Mom? Great scarf/sweater combo ... is that your real house? If so, we're coming by to look at baby pics.

2:13 That night manager cash buys you all kinds of great stuff, like bowling alley parties and what we assume is a hookah. It's hookah, right, Drake?

2:47 "Just as a reminder to myself, I wear every single chain even when I'm in the house." If we're being honest, that doesn't look like THAT many chains. Have you seen the kind of stuff 50 Cent wears?

2:55 You really know you've made it when you can take out a billboard featuring only the name of your song and an awesome owl. And then dance around on it.

4:39 This party is so bright, you can't help but squint your way through your crazy-cute dance moves. Oh, and ask your buds to wear shirts with the lyrics to this song on them.

3:46 Drake and Co. have posted up at a swank resort house after driving there in golf carts, but what we'd really like to discuss is this shirt. This is not his best work ... where are the sweaters?

3:10 When you're as rich as Drake, they also let you pilot your own private jet. It also comes with a babysitter who slaps your hand away when you push buttons.

Carrie tale

Carrie Underwood wanted attention for her performance of “Blown Away” at Sunday’s Grammy Awards. She got it. Theia creative director Don O’Neill told People the light-up dress was created in three days and had to be approved by Underwood’s stylist as well as the video team creating the projections. “I just like to stand still and sing sometimes,” Underwood said. “So this was the best way to do that, and it still created something visually attention-capturing and beautiful.”

12.3 MILLION

That’s the record number of viewers who watched Sunday’s midseason premiere of “The Walking Dead,” AMC announced Monday. The show’s previous record was 10.9 million viewers from the Season 3 premiere Oct. 14.

So much sympathy

If Anne Hathaway wins an Academy Award, brace yourself. The “Les Misérables” star gave another long, strange speech Sunday after collecting a supporting actress award at the BAFTA awards in London, telling the audience that co-star Eddie Redmayne was sick backstage. “Eddie, feel better. I’d be holding your hair back but, you know,” Hathaway joked, pointing at her award, abcnews.com reports.

For the Boys

The Backstreet Boys are ready to show America the shape of their heart—on the big screen. The same production company that brought us the LCD Soundsystem and Katy Perry movies is prepping a BSB doc for theatrical release, and according to the director, it will be a hard-hitting piece of journalism. “BSB is getting real,” Stephen Kijak told thr.com. So, he’s saying ... they want it that way?

“She’s my road dog. She’s my homie, my best friend.”
